Heavy Rains Fall Over Most of the State.

Some Damage Reported But the Corn Is Benefited.

DOWNPOUR AT SALINA

Basements Filled Quickly and Streets Flooded.

Wednesday in less than a half hour. The rain was accompanied by hail, but neither did much damage. The rain came almost without warning. At noon the sky was clear and there was not the least sign of a storm. In 45 minutes the storm was raging. In 10 minutes after the rain began to fall the streets in many places were full and the water was running over the sidewalks. Basements filled before the occupants had time to get out of them. The sewers soon filled. Many negroes believed the world was coming to an end and began to pray. It was hours after the rain ceased before the water fan off the streets. Messages from the surrounding country indicate that the center of the storm was here. Five miles south the storm was here. Five miles out the fall in Minneapolis. No fears are entertained of another flood. The rain was good for the corn crop. Practically all the wheat in this county has been harvested. Very little damage will be done to the wheat crop.

George Kinman, a stone mason living on Weat Twelfth street, claims the distinction of resurrecting the long lost hatchet of Carrie Nation. Mr. Kinman, in company with some fellow workmen, was digging a foundation for a house in the west end when the little implement which made Carrie Nation famous, was unearthed and brought to the Record office, where it is now on exhibition.

It is said that while the famous hatchet wielder was in Coffeyville last fall she visited with a family on West Eleventh street by the name of Ridenour. The Nations and Ridenours were old friends in Medicine Lodge before Carrie became noted, so it was only natural that she should tell others of her exploits and in order to make the pictures more natural and her scenes more dramatic, she produced the wonderful hatchet from her grip. Unnoticed and in some manner the hatchet got into the hands of the Ridenour children and was lost. Search was made high and low in every conceivable nook and corner, but no hatchet was to be found.—Coffeyville Record.

By tomorrow night the Kansas-Oklaho-ma interurban road will be surveyed from Chilocco through the city to Winfield, to the asylum. Then the work of making the permanent survey for Winfield will be commenced and will be rushed as rapid-ly as possible. The company has decided that it will not use the street from the Missouri Pacific depot to the Arkansas river, on account of the damage that is apt to be done by floods. It will construct its own right of way the entire distance and will cross the Arkansas river upon its own bridge. This right of way and bridge will be west of Summit street and west of the present wagon bridge. After crossing the bridge the road will run out to McKinley park and then on to Chilocco.—Arkansas City Traveler.

EXPENSIVE MIXING IN ENGLAND.

Cost of Sinking the Deep Shafts That

With increased and increasing de mand for coal came the necessity for opening our lower seams, and deeper shafts meant heavier capital expendishafts meant heavier capital expendi-ture in colliery enterprise. It is worthy of remark how little the outside public realize of the great difficulties that of-ten have to be overcome in sinking— such as passing through water bearing strata or running sands—or of the enor-mous cost entailed by some colliery developments.

As early as 1820 John Buddie, in giv-ing evidence before the house of lords, declared that the cost of sinking, even then, was frequently £10,000 to £15,000, and J. T. Taylor stated before a select committee on rating of mines in 1857 that at Haswell colliery, in the county of Durham, £40,000 was expended in contending with a quicksend, and that the shaft had ultimately to be abandon-ed. At Murton colliery, a few miles distant from Haswell, £300,000 was expended in sinking; the quantity of water pumped during the operation of passing through the overlying magnesian limestone bed amounted to an average of 9,206 gallons per minute, from a depth of 540 feet; and the three shafts ultimately reached the Hulton seam, at a depth of 1,488 feet from the surface, in April, 1843. contending with a quicksand, and that n April, 1843. in April, 1843.

Many deep and costly sinkings—several much deeper than in the last instance—have been put down since the Murton winning; but none, I believe, at a greater expenditure of capital, owing doubtless, to the greatly improved methods now employed in carrying on such operations through watery strata, notably the Kind-Chaudron system, whereby the shaft is bored out and the side protected by metal cylinders lowered from the surface, and the Poetsch ed from the surface; and the Poetsch or Goberat methods, whereby the wa-ter is frozen in the "running" sand or the other water-bearing stratum, and the shaft sunk through the solid mass.

Fleming, who is an old hand at matchmaking, wants good talent in a fistic way and in a letter from Johannesburg he writes what sort of men he wants. In order to induce American fighters to come to that part of the country, Fleming has appointed Sam Fitzpatrick his American representative. Fleming says:

The damage is supposed to have been caused by the water for the cooling system giving out when the machine was being driven the extra five miles for records.

It was supposed to be the desire of Mr. Vanderbilt to have this car establish a new world's record for the mile, or at least to break the record for the Empire track of :55 4-5 made by Oldfield. He did not succeed in this, however, for when the time came for the record trials after the races his car was hors du combat. The nearest he came to it in competition was a mile in 57 seconds.
